Becoming Agile Workshop

Discussing Agile for Your Organization

With the Agile Certified Practitioner (PMI-ACP) certification, the Project Management Institute (PMI®) has formalized its recognition of the value of Agile delivery in the project management world.

Why get your PMI-ACP certification? Agile is the upcoming and current way of product and project delivery - according to PMI's Pulse of the Profession 2018, 46% of surveyed organizations have used an Agile or hybrid Agile approach over the last 12 months. Knowing how to be Agile and proving your knowledge will be critical to success in the future.

If you work with projects which use Agile principles, whether you use Scrum or another framework, having this certification will give you and your organization confidence in its Agile project and product delivery.

Obtain an Internationally Recognized Certification

The PMI-ACP is internationally recognized. This certification focuses on knowledge that includes various frameworks and techniques and puts it all together in an understandable whole.

Along with having the knowledge to confidently pass the exam, this program provides a discussion base for concretely applying Agile successfully at work.

Requirements to Write the PMI-ACP Exam PMI has designated requirements which individuals must meet to qualify to write the PMI-ACP exam. You must have:

- A university degree
- 21 contact hours of training in Agile practices (which this program provides)
- 12 months of general project experience within the last 5 years. If you currently have your PMP® or PgMP®, this requirement is covered.
- 8 months of Agile project experience within the last 3 years. (Have a look at projects that have been run in an iterative and incremental manner.)
